ALL ABOARD

With G. E. Mortimore

THE DOG knows he isn't allowed to sleep on the boy's bed. So when he sees me, he dives hastily under the bed and tries to pretend he has been there all the time.

As soon as I am out of the room, he climbs back on the bed and curls up.

About 7 a.m. he awakens young John by scrabbling around and licking the boy's face. The resulting noise wakes up small brother Michael.

So two boys and a dog come padding into the bedroom where the boys' mother and father are trying to sleep. The dog whines and scratches at the bedclothes—the signal that he wants to go outside.

John takes him downstairs and lets him out. Often he just stands on the back veranda for a moment and sniffs, and not seeing or smelling any of his friends, he scratches to come back in, at once.

He is always on hand to see John off on the bus to school. On some days, he escapes from the yard at school-time, and vanishes.

But even on these days, he never fails to be back when the boy returns. He jumps and barks with pleasure, because John is his particular friend.

However, he always welcomes home every member of the household, wriggling his entire body, from nose to tail-tip.

It is hard to believe that only a short while ago he was a nervous newcomer to the house.

If the boys and I tumble around playing, he barks and pulls at us, imaging that we are really fighting with one another. He's a peacemaking dog.

A large brown female of undetermined breed calls for our dog on some mornings. She stands about a foot taller than our dog, but the difference in height doesn't stop the courtship, I'm afraid.

For a time the dog was a chronic chewer of toys, shoes and all loose objects. He was also a thief. In one week he dragged down a pork roast and a roast of beef—a pretty good score.

But he seems to have changed his ways—perhaps because he knows we are keeping a close eye on him.

I think he's a fairly knowing beast. One day when Peggy and the younger boy were coming home, he heard the telephone ringing, and as soon as the door was opened, he ran toward it, barking madly.

So Peggy told me when she answered the phone—as it happened, I was the one who was telephoning. I got her to hold the phone down to the dog's ear, and talked to him. The dog wagged his tail and licked the telephone all over.

However, he was baffled when we induced him to bark at a rented tape recorder, then played his voice back. He still hasn't figured that one out.

Strong Thieves 'Lift' $2,200

Thieves with more luck and muscle than finesse got away with about $2,200, mostly in silver, in an overnight raid on Musicale Network System Ltd., 833 Yates, a coin machine firm.

Also taken was $11 from Canadian Westinghouse Supply Co. Ltd., next door at 831 Yates.

The luck was in the thieves' timing — the whole operation apparently took place at a time when normally there would be someone in and out of the Musicale headquarters.

The break-in at Canadian Westinghouse was discovered at 1.05 a.m. yesterday by Const. R. A. Churcher of Victoria police.

Detectives found that the thieves had entered the premises by way of a skylight, lowering themselves into the office by a rope.

Most of the loot was coins from cigaret and record machines around Greater Victoria—it must have weighed about 250 pounds.

New Airport Runways Keep 100 Men Busy

Preparatory work for new runways at Patricia Bay Airport is now keeping about 100 men busy.

Harvey Blair, project superintendent for Perini Pacific Ltd., said yesterday that "when we get going on the job proper April 1, we'll have about 200 men on the job—most of them local."

Perini Pacific expects the $921,779 runway job to be finished by Aug. 1 "unless they decide on a new administration building," said Mr. Blair.

There are still indications the federal government may go ahead with such a building, he said.

Ottawa has indicated that the airport will be renamed "Victoria International Airport" at some time in the future."

About 175,000 tons of gravel will be needed for the project. It will come from a newly-opened pit near Mill Bay, from where it will be transported by barge.
